Soft Skills Fundamentals for Beginners Training Course is a 1-week foundation course for new graduates and early-career staff who are starting their first professional role. You learn workplace professionalism, basic communication, teamwork and career readiness through short practice rounds, and you leave with a First-Year Professional Habits Plan for your own job. The course is offered by Mercury Training Center.

About This Course

New starters often know their field yet stumble on the unwritten rules of work: how to write a clear email, speak up in a meeting, take feedback or ask for help. You need no prior work experience to follow this foundation course. You practice through role plays, peer feedback and short written tasks drawn from office and service settings.

Who It Is For

- Recent graduates who are moving from study into their first role and need to learn how a workplace runs day to day.
- Interns and trainees who complete assigned tasks under a supervisor and report on progress.
- Junior staff in administrative and support roles who handle requests from colleagues and customers.
- Entry-level technical staff whose work depends on clear updates to team members and supervisors.
- Career changers in their first months in a new field who want a structured start.

This course is not for experienced professionals who already lead meetings and coach others; a course on professional or leadership-level interpersonal skills suits them better. It is also not for people managers who need to handle team performance; a course on people management suits them better.

Competencies You Will Build

- Professional Conduct: arrives prepared, keeps commitments and follows workplace etiquette without reminders.
- Clear Basic Communication: writes short, polite emails and gives spoken updates that colleagues act on.
- Active Listening: confirms what was asked before starting a task and asks focused questions.
- Team Contribution: shares work, offers help and handles small disagreements calmly.
- Receiving Feedback: listens to correction, asks for examples and shows the change in later work.
- Self-Organization: plans the week, prioritizes tasks and flags delays early.

What You Will Be Able to Do

By the end of the course you will be able to:

- From a vague task request, write back a short confirmation that states the deliverable, deadline and open questions.
- Given a weekly task list, rank the items with the Eisenhower Matrix and agree priorities with your supervisor.
- Using the SBI feedback model, give a peer one specific, respectful comment on a shared piece of work.
- From a team meeting agenda, prepare a two-minute update and present it within time.
- Given a minor conflict with a colleague, choose a response from the Thomas-Kilmann styles and plan the conversation.
- Using your own self-assessment results, set three habit goals for your first year at work.

Quick Answers FAQ

What do I need to know before Soft Skills Fundamentals for Beginners?

Nothing in particular. The course assumes no prior work experience and suits people in their first job, internship or the months before starting one. Bring examples from your studies or current role.

How do soft skills fundamentals for beginners differ from professional-level soft skills training?

Foundation training covers the basics a new starter needs: etiquette, clear emails, listening, teamwork and taking feedback. Professional-level training assumes these habits already exist and moves on to influencing, leading meetings and coaching others.

Which soft skills matter most for new graduates starting work?

Reliability, clear communication, active listening, teamwork and openness to feedback matter most in the first year. They shape how much responsibility a new starter is given.

What do I take back from Soft Skills Fundamentals for Beginners?

You take back a First-Year Professional Habits Plan: a self-assessment baseline, three habit goals with checkpoints, templates for emails and updates, and a feedback schedule to agree with your supervisor.

For Your Manager

After the course, your new team member will be able to confirm tasks clearly, write short professional emails, give concise meeting updates and respond to feedback with visible change. They return with a First-Year Professional Habits Plan, which they will first use in a check-in with you to agree priorities, habit goals and feedback points for the coming month.
