Introduction:

One of the basic criteria that all governmental, business or civil bodies and institutions seek is to achieve customer satisfaction and satisfaction of their desires and needs. Despite this, studies have proven that 50% of customer calls received by most government agencies are unanswered. Callers outside of work time are not answered, and the pressure of calls may also cause the loss of some of them. In the necessities of professional work between companies, providing technical support service to customers in a distinct manner is one of the basics of competitive work, and as a matter of strong competition in the labor market, the customer is looking for companies that have the greatest interest in his dealings, the more interest in the customer, the greater the demand for this field. Which led to the need to pay attention to customer service in general and the quality and efficiency of call center operations in particular.
