

Employee Relations Investigation Training Course

Introduction

Employee relations investigation is a practical and essential capability for managing workplace concerns with fairness, consistency, and professionalism. This Employee Relations Investigation course explains how to respond to grievances, allegations of misconduct, disciplinary matters, and employee complaints through a structured fact-finding process. Participants learn how to define the scope of a case, collect reliable information, interview people effectively, and maintain confidentiality throughout the process. The program develops the skills needed to assess evidence, record findings clearly, and support balanced decisions based on facts. It emphasizes the investigator's role as a neutral professional who protects the integrity of the process while strengthening trust in the workplace. Its language reflects current themes in workplace-investigation training, such as internal complaint handling, interview practice, evidence review, report writing, and defensible decision-making.
